“Family law matters are stressful. During a divorce, even an amicable one, involving business, professional practice or complicated financial issues or matters involving children, it is difficult to make rational, well-informed, and thoughtful decisions,” says Kenneth E. Brewe.

Brewe, a Washington Law & Politics Super Lawyer (2001-2006) and a member of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers (AAML) says that the worst mistake families can make is failing to take a careful inventory of their circumstances before making important legal decisions. “Having someone help you approach these very personal decisions in a business-like manner is critical. This is especially true when significant assets or complex estates are involved.”

EXPERTISE WHEN PERSONAL AND FINANCIAL STAKES ARE HIGH

Along with his partner Sabrina A. Layman, Brewe has been providing Western Washington with the highest level of representation in a wide range of civil matters, with an emphasis on family law since 1979.

The AV-rated (very high to pre-eminent – highest ranking) practice includes a team of legal talent: Karen D. Moore, Rebecca J. Torgerson, Krista Stipe and Chad Eubanks, supported by paralegals, in-house accountants and other staff. Each Brewe Layman client is well cared for by an assigned team of attorneys and paralegals who establish long-term relationships and respond quickly and personally. In addition, the practice calls on a core group of seasoned outside professionals as necessary.

Brewe Layman concentrates on representing professionals and business owners or their spouses in complicated divorce litigation involving substantial or complex estates, closely held business entities and professional and business/property valuation issues. The diverse background of the team brings experience and expertise in handling divorces involving division of jointly owned businesses, properties, collections or other difficult-to-quantify assets.

Empathetic and active listeners, the lawyers skillfully guide clients through every step to obtain the most favorable result. They take an integrated approach to litigation that incorporates painstaking discovery, needs of cases brought by or against high-net-worth individuals, they are tenacious, meticulous, polished, ethical and solely focused on what is best for clients and their children.
